

Workshops to shed light on drug use at work

Drug and alcohol testing and screening specialist, Frontline Diagnostics will hold a series of workshops on the impact of drugs at work and how to develop policies to ensure a drug-safe workplace.

The Drug-Safe workshops, targeted at business-owners and managers and OH&S managers, will be held in Sydney, Canberra, Wollongong, Newcastle, Brisbane and Melbourne from next month.

The two-hour sessions will feature speakers such as Frontline Diagnostics managing director Michael White, who is also a legal expert and toxicologist.

"Most managers are oblivious to drug use and drug impairment at work," Mr White says.

"It's not easy to monitor the presence of drugs at work, yet 70 per cent of drug users in Australia are employed."

The workshops will focus on how to develop and implement a drug and alcohol policy, training managers and teaching employees about company policy, differences between the types of drug testing available, how Frontline Diagnostics can screen your entire workplace for the presence of drugs and how to structure an effective random drug testing program for employees.

The first workshops will be held on March 4 in Newcastle, on March 18 in Brisbane and on March 25 in Sydney.

The Drug-Safe workshops cost $60 (breakfast included) to attend.
